

Klein 'Eager' To Testify on Tie With Dodd

Chicago public relations man Julius Klein said here yesterday he is not a lobbyist for foreign interests, and he is eager to set the record straight on his relationship with Sen. Thomas D. Dodd (D-Conn.).

Klein, returning from West Germany to testify before the Senate ethics committee in Washington, said he was

"I am glad I now have an opportunity to appear and testify under oath," he said. "I will answer any question put to me."

Klein, 64, told a reporter that he will spend the next day or so studying the official transcript and then go to Washington.

Gifts to Dodd Denied

He denied Dodd had ever undertaken any assignment for him. He said Dodd never had been of any help to his business and never had received any gifts from him. He said Mrs. Klein had given the Senator's wife a rug costing $2.

Said Klein: "I am registered under the law as an agent for foreign principals, and I am not a lobbyist for foreign principals as my clients in Germany are not interested in any way in any pending or past legislation."
